8. V. ker. Henszlmann Imre utca 7.

Architect: unknown

Initiator: Earl Andrassy Géza

Built by: unknown

Date of construction: 1899-1900

The Henszlmann Imre Street started to develop in 1898, on the surroundings of a former road that was attached to the South side of the Károlyi kert. Earl Manó Andrassy and his son, Earl Géza Andrassy bought the parcels here and, between 1896 and 1905 the buildings were raised one by one, forming the former Kaplony road. The four-storey apartment house with its inner courtyard was built in late historicist style. It once hosted the medical station of the district, a tailor for women, a law firm, a numismatic company, a bike repair shop and a flower shop.

SATURDAY-SUNDAY 10:00-18:00

Architect: Reiner Dezső
 Initiator: Rákosi Jakab and wife, born Berta Weiller Berta
 Built by: Wellisch Tibor
 Date of construction: 1929

The so-called “Rákosi-udvar”, the hundred apartment palace was one of the most impressive buildings of the so-called “Chicago”, where doctors, plant managers, bureaucrats and actors loved to live. The ground floor was originally designed as a cinema, which has later worked either as such or as a theatre. During the WWII banquet was constructed on the top of the building, from which the whole area could be kept under fire control. The building has inspired a number of books of Zsigmond Móricz and Pál Békés and some films.

23. VIII. ker. MIKSZÁTH KÁLMÁN TÉR

At first, the square was named Reviczky tér in 1900, after the death of the young poet Gyula Reviczky. The house numbered 1 was the place where János Irinyi founded his first match factory in 1840. This house was replaced by a new one, where Kálmán Mikszáth, a famous Hungarian novelist spent his late years. After his death, the square was named Mikszáth tér, in 1911. The statue was made by András Kocsis, in 1961, honouring the 50th anniversary of his death.

25. VIII. ker. LŐRINC PAP TÉR

The square got his named first in 1900 after cardinal,prince primate and archbishop of Esztergom Scitovszky, but was later renamed Lőrinc pap tér in 1951. The owner of the name, Mészáros Nagybotú Lőrinc was a priest of Cegléd, and lieutenant during the peasants'war of Dózsa in the XVth century. The church standing here was supported by parliamentary representative Zichy Nándor, to whom was a portrait statue was erected in 1930. This statue was removed in 1949 to Sülysáp, because of 'political reasons', but returned to its original location in 1993.

Architect: Staerk Sándor

Initiator: Liebner Józsefné

Built by: unknown

Date of construction: 1894

The client of the neobaroque-style tenement house on the former Scitovszky square was Liebner József of Kakucs, imperial and royal 'administrator of kitchen' (asztalnok). Apart from keeping bees and a honey storage, he also ran a pub here, which were met with discontentment from the prayers of the jesuit church and habitants of the girls' college at the other side of the street. His monogram can be found above the gate. The building is also known as Darányi-house, named after influential liqueur-merchant Darányi István, who lived here from 1933.

27. VIII. ker. GUTENBERG TÉR

The more than 150 years old square was named primarily after Archduke Sándor, but serious debates followed in the 20th century between typographers and doctors concerning the name, whether it should be named after Gutenberg, because of one of the buildings here which gave place to the typographers' aid center, or Fodor József, as suggested by the Society of Doctors of Józsefváros. Finally, the first solution was chosen in 1946. According to some sources, the square did not become a transportation node due to the trees standing here.

29. VIII. ker. RÁKÓCZI TÉR

The square got her current face after the great flooding of Pest in 1838, when the river washed away all the buildings made with adobe, and urban planning started. The Market Hall dominates the place, which offered an alternative from all the bad named markets in the city. After the Great Market Hall at Fővám tér, this became No. 2., which continued the tradition of market halls with steel structures and brick facades. The most recent change in the life of the square was the building of metro line 4. The upper part, the playground and the water surface made a significant change in the neighborhood.

Date of construction: 1863-1865

In the south-east side of the square there once was a catholic wooden church with a bell-tower in the beginning of the 1780s. Permission to build a bigger, more decorative church was given in 1786 and constructions began in 1797. The facade was built in 1814 and designed by Fidél Kassalik. Budapest's tragic 1838 flood severely damaged the building, reconstruction work was led by József Hild. Elek Barcza redesigned the church around the turn of the 20. Century in historicist style.

43. VIII. ker. KÁLVÁRIA TÉR

Maps from the end of the 18th century show that Kálvária square (Kalvarien Platz) and its neighbourhood belonged to the outskirts of Pest at that time. At the beginning of the 1870s, the square's image developed into what you can see today, with the exception of the row of buildings. In 1893, the valuable sculpture of calvaria was placed in the garden of arts, Epreskert. The square later became a promenade and in 1941, another calvaria was added which was later placed to Rezső square in 1971.

66. XI. ker. BERCSÉNYI UTCA

Lágymányos was a rarely inhabited area of the city until the beginning of the 20th century. As of the 1910s along with the development of infrastructure, many residential buildings were built. Most of them belonged to the modern style of the 1930s. The BEAC football field had been operating for 40 years, later, the Skála shopping center took its place and brought life into the area. Today, Allee is operating at the heart of the neighborhood.

ADDITIONAL EVENTS

1. Official closing event

2018.05.11. Friday 18:00 Contemporary Architecture Centre (1111 Budapest, Bartók Béla út 10-12.)

Welcome speeches by: Alexandra Szalay-Bobrovniczky Deputy Mayor for Human Affairs and Bálint Kádár, president of Contemporary Architecture Centre

We invite you to the event where everyone involved in Budapest100' eighth edition will be: our partners and sponsors, as well as the volunteers, without whom this year's program wouldn't have been possible. During the event, we will hear a short presentation about the use of the squares of Budapest, and premier the official video of the 2018 program.

[HU]

2. The Budapest100 book is available again

Due to its great success, the second edition of Budapest100 stories – Twenty-four out of three hundred is now available!

Covering the first 6 years of Budapest100, this book presents 24 houses and stories out of the three hundred open houses of the past years. Illustrated with a great deal of photos, this book represents a small piece of the 100-year-old Budapest. The volume contains essays based on art history and archival research, interviews with residents, it mixes architectural descriptions with personal anecdotes, and evokes historic eras of the city.

Available only in Hungarian.

The book can be purchased at the Hungarian Contemporary Architecture Centre from April 24, 2018, weekdays between 09:00-18:00 and over the Budapest100 weekend, until the stocks last.

[HU]

3. ForteGo

The ForteGO is the most recent venture of the Fortepan photo archives. It is a free telephone application displaying the nearby locations of archive photographs, which helps you find where the pictures were originally taken, it also offers a feature to take a 'before-after' photo pair that you can share on the focus on communities surfaces.

Download the app and try the beta version developed exclusively for Budapest100!
